Over 50 contemporary artists feature, brought together as some of today's greatest creative rule-breakers

All contributing artists share a rebellious sensibility, often mixing comedy with subtly coded social commentary, such as artist duo Gilbert & George, sculptor Phyllida Barlow and artist Sarah Lucas

Some artists also express a very personal appreciation of Beano through their works, acknowledging the influence of comics on their artistic practice, including writer Alex Wheatle, Oscar-winning animator Nick Park and artist Nicola Lane who reimagines Dennis as he turns 70 this year

Audacious contemporary artworks hang on the walls of larger-than-life recreations of Beano's most iconic settings, as if stepping inside the pages of the comic

Interactive installations for all the family include: Peter Liversidge's patchwork of protest signs, giving visitors the chance to do away with the old world order and choose a new rule for life, painted live in the exhibition; jukebox filled with music influenced by Beano's rebellious streak – curated by Bob Stanley of indie dance band Saint Etienne – inviting visitors to choose the soundtrack to the show, and a new catapult game allowing audiences to take (virtual) aim at the world's great works of art

Dogs in World I Remembrance Day special

----- D ANDERSON

Dogs played an important military role for most European armies during World War I, serving in a variety of tasks. Dogs hauled machine gun and supply carts. They also served as messengers, often delivering their missives under a hail of fire.

How did dogs carry messages in WW1?

Early in the war, dogs were trained to deliver messages in combat. Images from the time show them leaping over coils of barbed-wire fences and carrying messages tied to their collars. They also sometimes carried small packages of food, cigarettes, explosives, or other supplies to soldiers in the trenches

Was there a dog in World War 1?

Sergeant Stubby (1916 – March 16, 1926) was a dog and the unofficial mascot of the 102nd Infantry Regiment (United States) and was assigned to the 26th (Yankee) Division in World War I. ... His actions were well-documented in contemporary American newspapers

Five Dog Breeds That Served in World War I

1. Border Collies
2. Boston Terrier
3. Doberman Pinscher
4. German Shepherd
5. Mixed-Breed Terriers

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1FMt8uqH5\_A

Up to 20,000 dogs were trained for front-line duties during World War One, newly uncovered records have shown.

The canines carried aid to the wounded, took messages between the lines and sniffed out enemy soldiers.

Their roles were deemed so important that in the early months of 1917 the War Office formed the War Dog School of Instruction in Hampshire to train them.

They were also used for pulling machine guns and equipment.

A collection of old newspapers, which has been made available on the family history website findmypast.co.uk, reveals how the animals lived in the trenches.

Many, about 7,000, had been family pets, while others were recruited from dogs' homes or came from police forces.

Sentinel dogs were trained to stand quietly on the top of the trench alongside their master's gun barrel, in order to let the soldiers know if anyone attempted to approach the barbed wire.

A mercy dog (also known as an ambulance dog, Red Cross dog, or casualty dog) was a dog that served in a paramedical role in the military, most notably during World War I. They were often sent out after large battles, where they would seek out wounded soldiers; and trench warfare suited their use. They carried first-aid supplies that could then be used by wounded soldiers, and comforted dying soldiers who were mortally wounded. They were also trained to guide combat medics to soldiers who required extensive care. Many mercy dogs were trained by national Red Cross societies to serve the country in which the specific society operated. The German army called such dogs medical dogs. As many as 20,000 dogs are estimated to have served as mercy dogs in World War I and World War II, and they have been credited with saving thousands of lives. Such dogs were also used by the United States in the Korean War.
